ADVANTAGES OF A BLENDED LEARNING DEGREE PROGRAMME

The Distance and Independent Studies Center (DISC) has twenty-five years of experience in the development and design of academic programmes of guided self-directed study. Currently, about 4,100 students are using the career-integrated master degree and certificate programmes of DISC for their professional careers.

More than 80 % of the participants in a DISC distance study degree programme complete their studies successfully. The basis of this high success rate is the combination of professionally renowned study programme leaders, study materials that are didactically packaged in a professional manner, online offers, and the reliable study programme advice and support by the staff of DISC.

EVALUATION

Prospective students,

Evaluation is of great importance in many countries and fields of politics, administration and social studies. However, the options for evaluation capacity building are rather limited at most places. This study program provides a new opportunity due to its blended-learning format. The participants are able to manage their own learning process individually for the assignment, design, implementation, and the use of evaluations.

Well-experienced evaluation experts make use of the specific didactical advantages of both classroom and online teaching. With the background of about fifteen years' evaluation experiences in development cooperation, the Center for Evaluation (CEval) at Saarland University offers the opportunity to have a "look insight" into professional evaluation practices. Furthermore, it is the only Blended Learning Program of Evaluation in Europe and the first study program offering some specific training for evaluation of the sustainable development goals (SDGs).
